Re: ACLU Request for Public Records Regarding Government Activities Related to Keystone XL Construction in Montana.

To Whom It May Concern:

On March 24, 2017, President Donald Trump announced federal approval for construction of the Keystone XL pipeline. This pipeline poses a threat¹ to the water supply of the Fort Peck Reservation.² Like the Water Protectors of Standing Rock, both Indigenous communities and their supporters in Montana are likely to protest the construction of Keystone XL as well as the continued desecration of Tribal sacred sites that pipelines bring. These issues moved onto the national stage when the Standing Rock Sioux Water Protectors rose up and protested to protect sacred water. These courageous actions inspired protests and rallies throughout Montana.³ The peaceful Water Protectors at Standing Rock were besieged by state law enforcement and made to endure caustic plumes of tear gas, the searing stings of rubber bullets, and torrents of government sanctioned force led by riot shields.⁴ Based on the tactical and forceful response seen from law enforcement during the Standing Rock protests, those in Montana who intend to protest the construction of Keystone XL may be faced with a similar dangerous and oppressively forceful response from law enforcement.

Since the end of the Standing Rock protests, federal⁵ and state governments⁶ have taken actions to silence current and future Water Protectors. Further, it has been confirmed that law enforcement has engaged in unconstitutional monitoring and other insidious actions to undermine protests of this nature.⁷ The American Civil Liberties Union (“ACLU”) of Montana is committed to protecting the civil rights of Montanans engaged in pipeline protests and fighting so that Indigenous people are not oppressed or marginalized as they historically have been. The ACLU of Montana believes that public agencies of the State of Montana are involved in pre-emptive planning and coordination with private, local, and federal entities to assist in efforts to further criminalize Indigenous rights and environmental justice activism. Further, the ACLU is concerned that the Montana Department of Justice (“MTDoJ”) is engaged in unconstitutional monitoring of the individual and group financial information and contributions of persons and groups supporting Water Protectors.

The ACLU has obtained documentation that shows the involvement of divisions of the Montana Department of Justice, specifically the Montana Analysis and Technical Information Center (“MATIC”), in the production of a Department of Homeland Security field analysis report titled, TTPs Used in Recent US Pipeline Attacks by Suspected Environmental Rights Extremists.⁸ This report suggests that “Native American causes”, such as oil pipeline protests, are being used to obfuscate the presence and coordination of “environmental rights extremists” in carrying out acts of civil disobedience and criminal conduct.⁹ The ACLU is concerned that these reports will be used as a pretext for actions intended to chill the free speech and disrupt the right to free association of peaceful Pipeline protesters. The ACLU is also concerned that these efforts will result in discriminatory targeting and continued oppression of Indigenous protesters. To ensure the protection of the rights of Montana citizens, Indigenous and otherwise, the ACLU is requesting the public records and information listed below.

Pursuant to Mont. Code Ann. (“MCA”) § 2-6-1003, the ACLU respectfully requests the following records from the entities provided below, in electronic format unless only available in paper:

Carter County:

- 1) All records and public information generated and/or maintained by Carter County including but not limited to, physical documents, emails, correspondence, transcripts, meeting notes, draft administrative rules, draft ordinances, procurement requests, procurement bids, and informal meeting notes¹⁰ regarding coordination, cooperation, planning, with private, local, state, and federal entities related to Keystone XL pipeline construction and responses to protests associated with the Keystone XL pipeline.
- 2) All records and public information generated and/or maintained by Carter County including but not limited to, physical documents, emails, correspondence, transcripts, meeting notes, draft administrative rules, draft ordinances, procurement requests, procurement bids, and informal meeting notes¹¹ regarding policies, plans, coordination, or cooperation with private, local, state, and federal entities related to enforcement actions and incarceration of potential protestors.
- 3) All records and public information generated and/or maintained by Carter County including but not limited to, physical documents, emails, correspondence, transcripts, meeting notes, draft administrative rules, draft legislation, procurement requests, procurement bids, and informal meeting notes related to expenditures, policies, procedures, drafted legislation and work done by Carter County or any of its subdivisions dealing with the monitoring social media platforms for information related to the Keystone XL pipeline.

If any of these entities refuses to provide any of the information requested, the ACLU requests that those refusals be provided to them in writing. The ACLU also requests that the refusals contain specific reasons for each denial, and those reasons provided contain “specific findings concerning privacy or confidentiality of a particular document before withholding it”¹² specific to each denial. If access to the records I am requesting will take longer than a “reasonable” amount of time, please contact me with information about when I might expect copies or the ability to inspect the requested records. If this request could be restructured to minimize the demands on your department’s resources, I would be willing to discuss alternatives
